The 7th ARIISW International Social Work Academic Forum (ARIISW-Shukutoku University)

We would like to invite you to the 7th ARIISW International Social Work Academic Forum (online), entitled "What does International Social Work comprise and how should this be presented in the Social Work curricula?"

The curriculum is the starting point of social work pedagogy. However, we assume that the International Social Work Curricula have yet to deepen the discussion. We will address what and how "international social work" should be taught in the globalized world.

We would like to present the current situation and challenges of International Social Work Education from the Asian region. We hope our discussion encourages more interest in the international perspectives in social work education.

What is taught in International Social Welfare and International Social Work (ISW) in an increasingly globalised society?

What should be taught?

These questions make the starting point of any teaching strategy. Therefore, why has there not yet been a deepening discussion regarding this subject?

Through this forum, we would like to present the current situation and challenges of ISW education and encourage more interest and involvement in the international field in general.
