Authors' guideline

The International Journal of Buddhist Social Work aims high-quality research and engaged scholarship and committing to diversity and inclusion in academic publishing. We encourage submissions from a diverse range of authors from across the world, with various backgrounds.

Only manuscripts of sufficient quality that meet the aims and scope of Buddhist Social Work will be reviewed and included in this journal.

The scope of Buddhist Social Work: Buddhist social work might be considered as an extension of the Buddhist social welfare services. The Buddhist social welfare service dates back to the time of the Buddha in 6 BC India, and it has a very long history and tradition. The Buddhist social work was derived from it very recently, which makes it a new and challenging area, however, the core part remains the same. The foundation of Buddhist social welfare and Buddhist social work is the Buddhist philosophy. Buddha encouraged philanthropy, charity, helping each other, supporting each other, and other virtues broadly shared across the Buddhist culture. The systematization of the Buddhist social work concept is not finished yet, however, the Asian Buddhist Social Work Research Network supported by ARIISW has developed the working definition as follows: "Buddhist social work is human activities to help other people solve or alleviate life difficulties and problems based on the Buddha nature. Buddhist Social Work always finds causes to work on in both the material, and social arena, as well as in human, or inner arena, working on both arenas in tandem. Its fundamental principles include compassion, loving kindness, mutual help, interdependency and self-reliance. The central value is the Five Precepts. The ultimate goal is to achieve the wellbeing of all sentient beings and peace."
